Introduction

A New Brand for the Next Era

For over a century, The American Legion has been nobly and ably represented by its 1919-patented emblem. As we look to the next era of The American Legion, the time has come for new brand marks to be used in all marketing communications applications. This also includes new marks for the American Legion Family and program brands.

The new brand marks do not replace the emblems. Instead, the emblems and the brand marks alike are to be used in specific applications that will better serve The American Legion going forward. This document outlines the manner and types of applications for all marks.
Purpose of Brand Mark

The American Legion brand mark was created to address the need to modernize our brand to appeal to the next generation of veterans. Moreover, the new brand mark takes into consideration a host of applications that the original emblem could never have anticipated. Those include online and social media, event and sports marketing, lifestyle apparel and more.

Brand Mark vs. Emblem

Going forward, the brand mark is to be used in all marketing communications applications, while the Emblem should be reserved for official documents and communications. Examples of each communications category can be found on page 7.
Development of The American Legion brand mark followed a deliberative three-month journey to understand the origins of the Legion, its role in American society and the people who are, and will be, its members. This process involved several focus groups as well as an in-depth audit of the emblem and how it is used throughout the organization.

Other veterans organizations, corporate brands and the Department of Defense were also benchmarked. In the process, a precedent established by the Department of Defense (DoD) served as a model for how the Legion brand could be evolved. Each department of the U.S. Armed Forces effectively utilizes two separate identities. One is the “department seal” and the other is its own brand mark. The department seal is used for all DoD documents, communications and identifying marks. However, when it comes to marketing communications for events, recruitment and other promotional functions, each department has a marketing brand. It is this marketing brand that is most familiar to the general public.

Examples of each U.S. Armed Forces department and its respective marketing identity is shown to the left.
The American Legion

Primary Brand Mark

The primary brand mark is the two-color version. This is the preferred version to use when the background is white or a light color sufficient enough to provide the required contrast for the mark to be clear and conspicuous.

Clear Space

Keeping clear space around the brand mark free of other design elements is vital to ensure the integrity of The American Legion brand mark.

The clear space should be the same as the width of the “L” that appears in the brand mark, as seen below.

The following guidelines offer direction in terms of when to use the emblem or the brand mark. While most applications will be clearly defined, inevitably some instances straddle the line between two areas. In those cases, use discretion based on the intended audience. When in doubt, please reach out for guidance. Contact information is on Page 48.

In Application

Brand Mark
- Advertising
- Apparel
- Business cards, letterhead, email signatures
- Credentials, event badges
- Press releases

The American Legion Primary Brand Mark Dos & Don’ts

Do
The primary brand mark can be used on a solid color or tonal background.

- on 15% black
- on 40% black

Don’t
Don’t use over a color background.
Don’t
Do not alter the brand mark or place a “background shape” behind it.
The secondary brand mark is the one-color version in either black or white. It should be used when a clean white or light gray background is not available. If given a choice, it is strongly preferred that the brand mark only appear on a blue plane (Pantone 654C or equivalent), but this may not always be possible or practical.

- for digital applications with transparent background, low resolution print applications
The American Legion Secondary Brand Mark Dos & Don’ts

Do

The secondary brand mark should only appear on continuous-tone color backgrounds with sufficient contrast to be conspicuous. In some cases, the secondary brand mark in black can also appear on a white background.

Don’t

Don’t use on backgrounds that do not provide sufficient contrast or inconsistent tones.
The American Legion Secondary Brand Mark Dos & Don’ts

Do

Use the secondary brand mark in images where there is not sufficient contrast to for the primary brand mark, so long as the background tone provides sufficient contrast without any clutter.

Don’t

Use the secondary brand mark in images if there is too much clutter or visual noise in the background regardless of the contrast.
The American Legion Secondary Brand Mark Dos & Don’ts

Don’t
Do not alter the brand mark or place a background shape behind it.
The American Legion Tertiary Brand Mark

Tertiary Brand Mark

Tertiary mark should only be used as a last resort.

The tertiary brand mark is designed with a container shape and white fill, to be used in any circumstances where the primary or secondary brand marks are unsuitable due to background noise, insufficient color contrast or to maintain the color equity of the brand mark on a contrasting color application. Preference should always be given to the primary or secondary brand marks.

Clear Space

Clear space is built into the file. However, care should still be taken to not crowd the brand mark with other elements in the composition.

The American Legion Tertiary Brand Mark Dos & Don’ts

Do
Use the tertiary brand mark in cases were there is too much visual background noise to create a clear separation or to preserve the color equity when not placed on white or light gray background.

Don’t
Don’t use over a white or light gray background or where the background tone is light and consistent enough to use the primary brand mark.
Don’t
Do not alter the tertiary brand mark
