RBL WAR STORIES

While I was Secretary of the Royal British Legion in Portugal prior to 2000 a request went out to collect war stories and experiences dating back many years. I volunteered and have been collecting them. The Treasurer of the RBL, Stewart Austin, requested that these stories be posted on the RBL Portugal Branch website and this was done by the Chairman of the Portugal Branch, Desmond Briggs, with some help from RBL HQ in London.

Since there may now be others out there who also have interesting war stories to tell or just stories relating to military service or RBL service the RBL website has an additional page at the website called "Membership Forum".

The website is below:

<http://www.britishlegion.org.uk/branches/portugal/membership-forum>

Among the War Stories you will find the report of Lewis T Watty who was rescued from the Los Banos Camp outside Manila on February 23,

PORTUGUESE FISHERMEN'S MEMORIAL

FARO, PORTUGAL

On November 30, 1943 a US Liberator bomber crashed into the sea some miles from Faro in the South of Portugal. Five of the 11 man crew were killed in the crash and six survived.

The crash occurred close to a 5 meter fishing boat manned by Jaime Nunes, Jose Mascarenhas and Jose's 13 year old son, Manuel. They immediately abandoned their nets and went about rescuing the six survivors, two of whom were badly injured.

Conditions were bad on the moonless night but Nunes and Mascarenhas provided what succour they could to the drenched and shattered crew. They gave them what they had on board. They were obliged to wait for the incoming tide that would permit them to row their heavily laden craft to shore. They reached the fishing harbor in the early hours of December 1st. In 1999 Jaime Nunes' courage was recognized through the award of a plaque presented to him by an official of the American Embassy.

War and Propaganda in the Twentieth Century

Conference Venue: Faculdade de Ciências Sociais e Humanas, Nova University of Lisbon

11-12 November 2013

Call for papers

The Twentieth century was fertile in experiences on the power of propaganda in war context. From the First World War to the Spanish Civil War, the Second World War, the Portuguese Colonial War, the Cold War, the war in Bosnia and the Gulf war, there were several occasions where propaganda studied itself as one of the combat arms.

The First World War was the first conflict where the States realized for the first time the importance of propaganda as an instrument of war. It then becomes clear the importance and potential of graphic communication. From then on, propaganda started to be seen as an essential tool, capable to connect the battlefield and the home front, a galvanizing instrument capable of making the populations accept the "inevitability" of war and the sacrifices that occurred from there.

Propaganda appeared as a representation, often with pictorial expression of the national identity in combat, extolling the virtues of national armies and making evil representations of the enemy, presenting him in a dehumanized form and instigating hatred between civilians and the military, while eliminating the notion of guilt or responsibility of government leaders. Analysed in the eyes of propaganda, wars always emerged as an inevitable consequence of civilizational clashes: we fight for an ideal, we struggle for a common interest.

As the importance of home front grew in importance in contemporary conflicts propaganda became more and more sophisticated. Ministries were created to think and manage propaganda, huge sums of capital were invested, and all mass media, developed in the late nineteenth hundreds and in the first decades of the twentieth century were used by the States: press, radio, television and film.

Propaganda represented the sacrifice of soldiers in war and praised the power of the country. It has been around these images that all over the world entire populations were mobilized on the expectation of victory. Through the static image of printed posters or the newspaper news projected in cinemas all over the globe, governments sought to promote a patriotic spirit, encouraging the effort of individual sacrifice by sending a clear set of messages that directly appealed to the voluntary enlistment in the armies, messages that explained the important of rationing essential goods, of the intensification of food production or the purchase of war bonds, exacerbating feelings, arousing emotions and projecting an image divided between the notion of superiority and the idea of fear of the opponent.

From press, in the First World War, to radio in World War II, to television and cinema from the 1950s onwards, propaganda proved to be a weapon as deadly as those managed by soldiers in the battlefield. That's why it is essential to analyse and discuss the topic of War and Propaganda in the Twentieth Century.

This conference is organized by the IHC and the CEIS20 and is part of the Centennial Program of the Great War, organized by the IHC, and the International Centennial Program coordinated by the Imperial War Museum in London.

The meeting includes papers given by invited speakers and presentations submitted through a call for papers.

The selection of proposals will be guided by the purpose of ensuring maximum quality and diversity of topics.

Submission: February 1st to June 1st 2013

Michael Bracey Archival Research

My name is Michael Bracey. I am a Vietnam Veteran (1967-1968), and the owner of a military document retrieval service. I research military unit/ship records at the National Archives in College Park, MD. I have over 20 years of research experience, and am a former Staff Legal Advisor for the Board of Veterans Appeals.

I have had success in finding documentation of stressor incidents that form the basis of PTSD disability claims. I specialize in researching documents from Vietnam back to the Revolutionary War. These documents include, but are not limited to:

- US Army Daily Journals and Operational Reports,
- US Navy Deck Logs and Muster Rolls,
- US Marine Corps Chronologies, and
- US Air Force After Action Reports.

In short, I find the documents which the Board of Veterans Appeals and the VA Regional Offices accept as evidence in PTSD/Agent Orange cases.

I have done case work for many law firms specializing in veteran disability cases, including PTSD and Agent Orange. I also participate in presentations and panels at The University of Detroit, Mercy School of Law. for students of the Veterans Law Clinic which hosts "Project Salute", and is coordinated by

Ms. Tammy Kudialas Esq.

My military and professional experience provides a unique approach that may be of assistance to you in achieving your goals. I am sending my references, CV, and samples of some of the evidence I've obtained which has been instrumental in the successful outcome of previously denied cases.

Please contact me with any questions.

Thank you,

University of Massachusetts in Lisbon, Study Abroad Program

\(http://www.portstudies.umassd.edu/lisboa/\)

Program Description

UMass in Lisbon, sponsored by the UMass Dartmouth Center for Portuguese Studies with the support of the Luso-American Foundation, offers American students the opportunity to spend a summer, semester or year in the vibrant capital city of Lisbon learning about the vast Portuguese-speaking world and European Union. As the only residential study abroad program in Portugal managed directly by a major American university, UMass in Lisbon provides unrivaled access to one of the world's most strategic centers of language and culture. Through our partnership with The University Institute of Lisbon (ISCTE-IUL) and the Technical University of Lisbon's Superior Institute of Economics and Management (ISEG-UTL), students will have a wide array of curricular choices in both English and Portuguese, including UMass courses taught on site by both UMass and Portuguese faculty and language/culture study at all levels. A significant number of field trips will complement classroom learning, and living accommodations will be shared with European ERASMUS and Portuguese university students. Internships, home-stays, and service-learning opportunities are also planned, with administrative assistance available 24/7. Students may study for a semester, a year, or during the summer
