Sons travel deep into the heart of Texas

Nearly 900 delegates came to Houston this week to take part in the 42nd annual Sons of The American Legion National Convention. In all, 46 Detachments were represented in activities that marked the end of another administrative year for the organization. Year-end reports were read and many awards were handed out (see Page 4).

Sons + Legion programs = winners!

If there was a dark cloud above the Houston skyline this year, it would be that this was the first time in memory that Sons didn’t achieve 100% of their membership goal in time for the National Convention. In spite of that one drawback, they still arrived in Texas with another all-time high in membership.

In addition to looking back, one of the more important reasons for congratulating Sons for their efforts at raising money, raising membership and raising awareness for American Legion programs (see Pages 2 and 3).

Gladden’s Houston ride

It’s more than a suntan. Think of it more as a burn of honor. As the result of riding more than a thousand miles and helping the Legacy Run raise more than $334,000 this past week, newly elected S.A.L. National Commander Joe Gladden is sporting a painful sunburn across his face.

If it doesn’t keep him from smiling broadly.

Gladden is a 22 year member of the Sons, carries an honorary life membership card and is also a member of The Legion Riders. He has always belonged to Overlea-Perry Hall, MD Squadron 130.

His top priority this year will be the Legacy Scholarship Fund and raise $250,000 that will help the children of our fallen soldiers get a college education.

Rita Cosby has earned many accolades during a career spanning 20 years as a television host and New York Times bestselling author. She is a three-time Emmy award-winning journalist who has interviewed more than a dozen world leaders and five U.S. Presidents.

Yet, the interviews that made the deepest impact on her life were those she conducted with her own father about a part of his life she knew nothing about until after her mother’s death.

Cosby shared with Sons how her parents had divorced when she was a teen and that it wasn’t until after her mother’s death that she discovered, by chance, that her father had served as a Polish freedom fighter during World War II. She went looking and found him still alive. Father and daughter reconnected by collaborating on the book, “Quiet Hero” that tells the amazing story of the teenage boy who fought Nazis, was taken prisoner of war, escaped and was saved by American troops near the end of the war.

Cosby says she shares a kinship with Sons because they know that freedom is not free and they, too, want to carry on the legacy of their fathers.
The checklist for success

Editor’s note: The following remarks were delivered during Saturday’s session by George West, Chairman of The American Legion Internal Affairs Commission’s S.A.L. Subcommittee.

Commander Huntzinger, taking a look at the goals you set a year ago, number one on the list was to promote programs of the Sons, The Legion and the Auxiliary. You certainly have done that throughout this year. For that, check!

Regarding education of members, check!

Improved communication in our organization, check!

I know you wanted to institute the S.A.L. Bandwagon with target dates for membership with no rear view mirror. Check!

You felt that promoting technology would increase communication and you carried that thought forward. Check!

Your slogan of “Be Involved. Be Informed” was well carried out, really to the N° degree. Check!

To me, leadership from the top has been very prevalent this year. All of you delegates in this hall can be proud of your year of outstanding service.

Conducting the National Convention was to elect and appointed new leaders responsible for shepherding the Sons’ organization through the next year.

Attendance at S.A.L. National Conventions has become more predictable since new rules impacting pre-registration and pre-payment of delegate fees went into effect in recent years.

Perhaps one noticeable difference in this year’s convention was the absence of long-time National Assistant Adjutant Harold Thompson who had to remain at home in Nebraska due to a death in the family. Taking his place this year was National Assistant Adjutant Anthony Wright. Just about the only snafu this year was the result of some sloppy handwriting on preregistration forms that required the staff to remake a number of name badges. Wright said Detachments will probably be required to type future forms to avoid similar problems.

He’ll also put a premium on membership and has chosen as his theme, “Shooting for the Moon.” That’s an appropriate phrase considering his membership goal has been set at 375,000, a 6.3% increase over this year’s goal. In order to reach such heights, Joe will commission each of his Vice Commanders as captains of their own space ships (regions). He’d also like to see every member of the Sons map out a family tree that starts with the first person in their family who is or was eligible to be a member of The American Legion, then list all brothers, sisters, sons, daughters and so on in an effort to identify those who are and are not currently members of each branch of The American Legion Family today.

“He’s the 45 people in my own family tree, I know only about a third are members and that’s something I plan to work on,” says Gladden. “I’m sure others will see something similar when they try this exercise.”

There’s no lack of involvement in his immediate family. His wife, Bobbie, is a member of Unit 130. All three of Joe’s sons are members of the S.A.L. and his oldest currently serves in the Maryland National Guard. Joe’s eligibility flows from his father, an Army veteran of World War II who served in England and passed away when Joe was just 10.

In his other life, Joe owns a tax and accounting company. He’s a 1982 graduate of the University of Baltimore.

American Legion Leading candidate Daniel Dellinger is also a 29 year member of the S.A.L. and told Sons he wants to work together as a team to build Legion Family membership this year.

Auxiliary Honorary National Junior President Amanda Washburn had high praise for the work of Sons from her own state of Nebraska.

With the year nearly ended, Sons lined up Saturday to donate an additional $69,000 to CWF, CMN, Fisher House, Legacy Scholarship, NEF and more.
